Israel launches world's first distress service to accept video chats and texts

- Phone app allows people to make live distress calls to emergency services
- Developed by start up Reporty and headed by former Israeli prime minister
- Helps them see the victim and determine the exact location of the incident
- If successful, app could be adopted by police servcices around the world